UTTARAKHAND FOUNDATION DAY AT TULA'S INSTITUTE

About Uttarakhand Day

Following the independence of India, the Himalayan districts of erstwhile United Provinces began to receive significant attention in the regional literature. In 1949, the Princely State of Tehri Garhwal acceded to the Union of India. With the adoption of the Constitution of India in 1950, the United Provinces was renamed Uttar Pradesh and became a state of India. Even after decades of independence, the Government of Uttar Pradesh couldn't meet the expectation to address the interests of the people in the Himalayan region. Unemployment, poverty, lack of adequate infrastructure, general underdevelopment and the migration of native (Pahari-speaking) people from the hills in search of better opportunities ultimately led to the popular demand for the creation of a separate hill state. Following the formation of Uttarakhand Kranti Dal for the purpose of achieving statehood, protests gathered momentum and took the form of a widespread statehood movement across the region in 90s. The movement took a violent turn on 2 October 1994, when the Uttar Pradesh Police opened fire on a crowd of demonstrators in Muzaffarnagar, killing a number of people.

The statehood activists continued their agitation for the next several years and consequently the state of Uttarakhand was formed as Uttaranchal on 9 November 2000 by the Uttar Pradesh Reorganisation

Act, 2000, bifurcating the erstwhile state of Uttar Pradesh. On 1 January 2007, Uttarakhand was renamed Uttarakhand, reclaiming the name by which the region had been known prior to statehood.

About Rangoli

Rangoli is a timeless tradition that is followed all over India. Rangoli is also known as Alpana, Aripoma, or Kolam. It is an ancient art, practiced by almost all households. In many cases, designs are passed down through generations with some of them being hundreds of years old.

The word 'Rangoli' is said to have been derived from the words 'Rang' and 'Aravalli' which refers to a row of colors. Rangoli designs and colors vary between different regions but they all follow some basic patterns. A Rangoli usually has a geometrical structure that is also symmetrical. The design patterns often consist of natural elements like animals, flowers, etc.

Rangoli at Diwali

Diwali is celebrated, primarily to herald the coming of the Goddess Lakshmi. Prayers are offered to her, asking for her blessings in the form of wealth. As such, a Rangoli design is created at the entrance of the house, not only to welcome the guests that visit, but also the Goddess herself. Rangoli patterns are usually made using coloured chalk, rice powder, and crushed limestone.

There is no limit to how big a Rangoli can be. Most Rangolis are the same size as a doormat placed at an entrance. These Rangolis are especially popular among residents of city buildings, where space is a constraint. For larger houses like bungalows, it is not uncommon to find an entire courtyard filled with a colorful designed Rangoli.

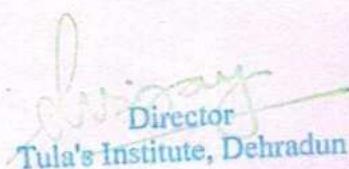

The variety in patterns and the difficulty levels for a Rangoli is largely dependent on the talents and skills of the person making the Rangoli. A Rangoli is always made by hand and all designs are carved out using the fingers. A line is usually drawn using a single finger, like a pencil. In some cases, a pattern may be outlined using dotted movements, which are joined together at the end. Once a pattern is formed, the desired colors are filled in.

Summary Report

On 19th October 2021, Tula's Institute organized a rangoli and diya making competition to mark the upcoming festival of lights - Deepavali.

In the esteemed presence of Dean Academics- Nishant Saxena , Dean of Management - Ranit Kishore and Registrar- Pawan Kumar Chaubey , the rangoli competition was observed, which was initiated by the Tula's Vibgyor

The students created beautiful rangoli patterns on various concepts like Om, Swastik, Peacock etc. Students put in a lots of effort and came up with amazing ideas. They used diyas, flowers and other decorative material to beautify their rangolis.

Outcome:

1. Assisting Those in Need: The primary outcome of a cloth donation drive is providing clothing to individuals and families who may not have the means to purchase new clothes. This can help address issues of poverty, homelessness, and vulnerability, ensuring that basic clothing needs are met.
2. Community Engagement: Donation drives often engage the community in a collective effort to support those in need. People come together to donate clothing, volunteer their time, and organize the logistics of the drive, fostering a sense of solidarity and compassion.
3. Empowerment and Dignity: Receiving donated clothing can empower individuals by meeting their basic needs and enhancing their sense of dignity and self-worth. Having appropriate clothing can also enable people to participate more fully in society, including in employment, education, and social activities.
